Zion and Bryce Canyon Awesome September Trip Planned

A very special trip to Zion National Park and Bryce Canyon National Park is planned from September 21-27th to experience some of the very best scenery and hiking in the southwest. This trip is for the entire family. You may join in on the planned hikes or simply enjoy the sights. We will be camping in Zion at the Watchman Campground, and this is the view you see when you peek out of your tent in the morning:

Space is limited, and interested Trailblazer members will need to reserve their spot by September 14th. A wealth of information is available on the website about both Parks, so please check there for the latest details. Come along and see for yourself! Zion and Bryce Canyon have so much to offer: deep blue skies, stunning vistas and magnificent formations are around every corner in the Utah canyons. To give you a preview, some pictures from last year's trip are on the website at www.simitrailblazers.com/pix/zion08/.

PICTOGRAPHS OF RIDERS ON HORSEBACK

An unusual Chumash pictograph site in the Santa Monica Mountains is focused on four riders on horses and/or mules. It is formally known as LAn-717 and is one of the most interesting and brightest rock art sites in the mountain range.

An academic analysis of the site by Gregory A. Reinhardt, entitled "Pictographs with a Historic Component: LAn-717, A Los Angeles County Rock Art Site," appears in Messages from the Past: Studies in California Rock Art, Monograph XX, Institute of Archaeology, University of California, Los Angeles, n.d.

The panel is done almost entirely in red pigment. The riders are arranged in a line - one after the other as though they represent a particular group of equestrians and a particular event. Because of the consistency of style that is shared by each image, it obvious that all four figures were painted by the same individual. The horses are accurately depicted, as are the riders in relationship to the horses. The artist, then, would appear to be an eye witness - not someone simply depicting an event passed by word of mouth. At least three groups of ritualistic figures seem to face the equestrians from below - in awe of what they see. The panel is focused on the riders as though their passage represents a major event in the life of the Chumash observers. The panel, at least most of it, was certainly composed during the historic period. The composition may celebrate the first encounter with people of western European culture and the horse or mule. So, who do the equestrians represent?

Most likely the rock art panel depicts one of the Portola expeditions, i.e., of 1769 or 1770. Portola's first expedition left San Diego in early summer of 1769 to meet with the packetboat San Antonio at Monterey Bay. The land force, which included Fray Junipero Serra, passed north of the rock art site on August 10, 1769, and sent scouts south to explore for a possible coastal route to Monterey.

Portola missed the San Antonio, which did land at Point Conception about 125 miles west of the Malibu on its return voyage. They inquired about the Portola expedition and were informed through gestures about how the expedition had passed through the area on horseback going north and then about their return. The Indians acted out the scene by sitting astride water casks, which had been brought ashore, and made appropriate gestures to indicate horsemen.

Juan Rodriques Cabrillo had traveled up and down the coast by ship in 1542-43 as well as Viscaino in 1602. Both sailed in open, undecked vessels. There is no record to indicate that they had any horses or mules.

The Anza expedition came through southern California in 1774. However, Anza traveled well north of the Santa Monica Mountains.

Another explanation is that the pictograph panel was painted during the mission period as magic against the Spanish/Mexican intruders. If this were the case, one might expect more than just four riders and many other motifs of Spanish/Mexican life. The four riders, as previously stated, seem to depict an event. However, it is still possible that a group of formerly friendly Chumash Indians returned to this old place of "power" to call upon adverse power to rid the land of the now unwanted invaders by controlling their spirits.

Finally, one is tempted to refer to the equestrians as the "four horsemen of the Apocalypse," a story that could have been relayed by priests in the missions. This seems unlikely since the biblical horsemen carried a bow, a pair of balance scales, and a sword. Only one equestrian at LAn-717 seems to be carrying anything. We are, of course, always quick to put things in our own frame of reference.

So, my money is on the depiction of the Portola expedition. How could the Indians know that the event would lead to the utter destruction of their culture and the death of 75-80% of their population within three to four decades. A universe collapsed and another took its place. How sad for us all.

The 25th Annual California Coastal Cleanup Day

California Coastal Cleanup Day is the premier volunteer event focused on the marine environment. In 2008, more than 70,000 volunteers worked together to collect more than 1,600,000 pounds of trash and recyclables from our beaches, lakes, and waterways. Since the program started in 1985, over 800,000 Californians have removed more than 13 million pounds of debris from our state's shorelines and coast. Cleanups will be held throughout California along bays, creeks, rivers, highways, and the coast. Join the Trailblazers as we participate in the Coastal Cleanup at the Simi Arroyo. See the schedule for all the details!

August 20th - 23rd 2009 - Dinkey Lakes Backpack

THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 2009 – Seven Rancho Simi Trailblazers participated in the backpacking trip to Dinkey Lakes. The first night was spent at Dinkey Creek Campground (5,710'), where we car-camped overnight in sleeping bags/tents. Fortunately there were only a few mosquitoes around, it was a relatively warm night. The campsite was set among towering conifers and we were allowed to have a campfire. We retired early, eager to continue our adventure the next morning. The next three days were spent exploring this beautiful area. The day-by-day trip summary is well worth reading. It is available on the News section of the website, along with many pictures that show the beauty and rugged nature of this area.

August 15th 2009 - Zuma/Westward Beach to Point Dume to Paradise Cove

Seven hikers carpoled to the trailhead off Westward Beach Road. A marine layer blanketed the coast, keeping the temperature pleasantly in the 60's as we began hiking toward the Point Dume land mass. After an easy climb onto Point Dume, we followed a trail as it led down to Dume Beach. We then strolled along the sandy beach for a couple of miles, enjoying the ocean sounds and sights, eventually arriving at the Paradise Cove Beach Café (<http://www.paradisecovemalibu.com>), a landmark for decades. We rested in the free-to-the-public beach chairs outside the restaurant, consumed beverages and ice cream, watched the other beachgoers, and reminisced about the "good old days" (including the TV series The Rockford Files which was set in Paradise Cove). After a while we walked out onto the nearby pier, watched a few fishermen, and enjoyed the view. Eventually we resumed our hike and headed back along the beach the way we had come. After climbing back onto Point Dume, we hiked to its highest point which afforded excellent panoramic views.

We then took a slightly lower trail to an observation point with two benches where we spotted what appeared to be seals and dolphins. We continued on the trail around the point and descended to the parking lot. We then headed home having completed an easy 6.1-mile hike with 400' of elevation gain, vowing to return again, perhaps in the spring when the coreopsis plants are in bloom.

August 8th 2009 - Carpinteria Bluffs

Seven hikers looking for a day of beach tranquility hiked the Carpinteria Bluffs trail this morning. We started at the trailhead and walked along the bluffs with a view of the ocean most of the way. We stopped at the Seal Sanctuary and spotted a few seals enjoying the surf. Next, we headed towards the campground and spent the rest of the hike walking on the sand along the shore dodging the waves and enjoying the view of the surf and the cool breeze on a warm day. Most of us felt overdressed for the hike. We sat on the rocks and had lunch and then returned the same way, stopping again at the Seal Sanctuary where Roger captured a spectacular picture of a seal lion playing near the rocks. It was a calming and reflective way to spend a Saturday morning.

August 1st 2009 - Palos Verdes Peninsula Trail

Ten of us thought we would take our chances today. We learned about this hike from an article in the newspaper. Since none of us had ever done any hiking in The Palos Verdes area, we thought it would be a great opportunity.

On the first look down the cliff from the trailhead, it became obvious that the path ahead would be a difficult one. There was no real trail, just a path along the beach, ridden with bowling-ball sized boulders and many very slippery rocks.

So, half of us decided to take the high road and the other, far braver half, took the low road. The high road was on the bluffs, well above the beach, and also through some rather affluent residential streets. After a total of only about 2.6 miles, those that decided to brave the beach, found a path back up the cliff and on to the bluffs. This is where the whole group met and talked back to our cars via the bluffs. It was a noble effort, but this hike is definitely off our list. Although the weather was cool, at best we only made it about a third of the way to our destination.
